Top 10 Stocks for 2015

Fellow Investor,

A new year is here, and you'd better be prepared to take action.

Is your portfolio ready for 2015?

Don't get caught by surprise! The time to prepare for it is NOW.

To help you do that, I'm busy refreshing my strategic outlook on the areas I think are going to present investors with the biggest opportunities over the next 12 months.

I'm especially excited about the ten unstoppable stocks that are making up my buy list right now. These are the same type of innovative, explosive growth stocks that have delivered us some big double-digit winners in 2014:

in this report:

- 22.8% in EMC Corp.
- 40.4% in InterMune
- 21.3% in Blackhawk Network
- 19.5% in AutoNation
- 25.7% in Cornerstone OnDemand
- 50.3% in HomeAway
- 31.4% in F5 Networks
- 10.9% in Silver Spring Networks
- 13.8% in Covanta
- 16.4% in Proofpoint

That's on top of 30 double-digit winners in the 18 months before that. We've been locking in steady double-digit gains month after month no matter whether the market has been going up, down or sideways! And I'm going to show you how to do the same.

But TIME IS RUNNING OUT to grab your share of the profits from the next big move up, so let's get started with my top 10 stocks for 2015 — buy now, BEFORE the window of opportunity slams shut!

Stock Superstar #1: The Sky's the Limit

Cerner (CERN) provides a platform to make keeping track of electronic health records an easier process across all platforms of medical research, patient care, pharmaceutical/medication management and billing. It's cloud-based software platform, HealtheIntent, creates an "anytime, anywhere" data system that allows healthcare providers to aggregate and reconcile data across several points of care. It can receive data from any EHR, existing HIT system or other source like a pharmacy or insurer, and store it in one location using the cloud. That means less time waiting for one office to get information from another office, helping to improve outcomes and lower costs.Its software manages various processes for healthcare organizations of all sizes, from solo practitioners to large healthcare systems to entire countries.

Are You Pocketing Profits Like This?

Despite the last 36 months being one of the most volatile periods on record, GameChangers subscribers have been racking up blockbuster returns regardless of the market going up, down or sideways.

Over the past decade (which includes the recession), Cerner has managed to grow revenues at a mostly-organic growth rate of 13%, while earnings have jumped nearly twice that at 25%, boosted by operating margins that climbed steadily from 9% to the mid-20% range.

That's a pretty impressive record. With a top-line growth rate in the mid-teens and earnings expansion in the low 20% range, this is a double-digit profit play you don't want to miss, but you must buy now before Wall Street catches on!

Don't just take my word for it—see for yourself some of the blockbuster gains we've locked in over the 36 months:

Stock Superstar #2: Building Consistent Returns in This Market Environment

ABM Industries (ABM), formally known as American Building Maintenance Industries, provides exactly that to thousands of commercial, industrial, governmental and residential facilities throughout the country. ABM consists of five segments: Janitorial (roughly 50% of revenue and profit), Facility Services (mechanical engineering and technical services), Parking, Building & Energy Solutions (heating, ventilation, etc.) and Security. It may not be the sexiest business, but the fact that ABM provides essential services for our working population helps give it some stability.

The stock also popped on my radar because after a bit of a rest, earnings growth has been picking up again recently. I also like that the company generated around $100 million in free cash flow last year. A market cap of close to $1.44 billion gives ABM a free cash flow yield of 7%, which is very strong.

The current market environment is perfect for companies such as ABM that have the ability to generate earnings gains no matter the broad conditions, especially as continued low interest rates will motivate investors to pay higher P/E ratios for those earnings. In its most recent fiscal fourth quarter (which ended in October 2014), ABM reported good results with 5% revenue growth and operating revenues up 10%. The Janitorial, Parking and Building & Energy Solutions segments all posted strong improvements.

There is a lot to like about this stock right now. The company has a solid long-term record, is coming off a strong quarter and is back on track to grow earnings. The stock is trading at a good value around 13X fiscal 2015 free cash flow and offers an attractive 2.4% dividend yield. And ABM is able to maintain a strong balance sheet with operating profits more than 10X interest expenses and net debt less than 25% of its total capitalization. All of these factors are important on their own, but even more so when you combine them amid an uncertain market environment.

Stock Superstar #3: A World-Renowned Firepower in Satellite Radio

With a market capitalization above $18 billion and a world-renowned satellite radio brand, Sirius XM Holdings (SIRI) is a top pick I have a feeling you are familiar with.

What really stands out to me is SIRI's growth profile. As satellite radio is becoming a standard in new cars, the company that sells these radios and advertising has seen its revenue numbers grow by around 3% on a sequential basis (or 7%-9% year-over-year).

Quarterly earnings tend to come in between $0.01 and $0.02 per share, which has likely contributed to the stock's reputation as a feast-or-famine playground for short-sellers. However, the 100% growth-and-collapse cycle that we're seeing here is really an artifact of dividing profits among 5.7 billion shares and then rounding up or down to the nearest penny.

As satellite radios continue their path toward becoming a true staple in new cars, this remains the blockbuster story. Full details here.

Stock Superstar #4: A Compelling Growth Opportunity in Cyber Warfare

Akamai (AKAM) operates at the intersection of content delivery and network security, and has roughly 135,000 servers across the globe. These servers help its customers – including virtually all of the largest media and video-intense companies in the world like Yahoo, Facebook and Netflix – bring data faster to the ultimate user (that means people like you and me, who are busy downloading videos and photos).

The company says its servers are located on what might be termed the "edge" of the Internet, which in other words means that the servers are located physically close to end users. Because of that close proximity, content gets delivered faster. Management has claimed that as much as 30% of global Internet traffic is routed and cached across its servers.

Since AKAM servers sit on the edge of the network and thus outside of corporate firewalls that are installed on premise or in the cloud, the Kona segment offers what can be thought of as a "first line" of defense against cyber attacks. Akamai can help deflect attacks before they ever make it to the corporate firewall.

Another reason I like AKAM is because it's a relatively U.S.-centric tech play, as it gets 70% of its revenues domestically. That's important in an environment where investors seem to be worried about international exposure and emerging market slowdown.

The company’s strong results and guidance helps set the stage for continued growth in 2015. With further upside ahead, this is a stock that you don’t want to miss profiting from.

Stock Superstar #5: This Sports Retailer is Kicking Into High Gear

Hibbett Sports (HIBB) is a sporting goods retailer that it is very attractively valued at the moment. HIBB operates about 950 stores across 31 states in the Southeastern U.S., each focused on small- to mid-sized markets of 25,000-75,000 people. This is an interesting strategy, as it allows the company to limit its competition and become the dominant sporting goods retailer in the area.

While the company's merchandising strategy is often local in nature, featuring apparel from local professional and college sport teams, the company's stores also sell brand-name athletic wear including Nike, Jordan and Under Armour. In the 2014 fiscal year that ended February 1, HIBB derived 45% of total revenues from footwear, 32% from apparel and 23% from sports equipment.

A recent pullback brought these shares down to an attractive price, and the company's latest third-quarter results (which boosted shares nearly 4%) indicate that a rebound is ahead. While HIBB may not be able to achieve its past levels of growth in the near term, I certainly believe it has the potential to convert its 2.5% comparable store sales increase into 7%-10% earnings growth as margins remain stable. And in the longer term, management plans to grow its store base as high as 1,500, which will also add to growth.

The college football season is also cooperating this year. Two universities from states with a strong Hibbett presence –the University of Alabama again and Mississippi State – are likely to be part of this year's new four-team college football playoffs. A disappointing season in Alabama impacted sales last year, but the story looks to have a happier ending this year.

Another aspect I like about the company is its discipline and high returns, as Hibbett's goal is to reach 40% return on investment on its stores – a very attractive return only made possible by the relatively low cost ($225,000) to open or upgrade a store. I believe the stock's decline is now behind us and the shares are now discounting realistic growth going forward. This is a very attractive value play, but you have to jump on it soon!

Stock Superstar #6: Monster Profits Fueled by this Energy Breakthrough

The alternative fuel field is a crowded place, with biodiesel just one of the many options available on the market. But since government standards have mandated increased purchases of biofuels through 2022, this has become an attractive area to find lower-priced companies with fantastic growth potential.

Details Here

FutureFuel (FF) is one such opportunity that packs a one-two punch of income and growth. This undervalued dividend stock has a strong sales trend that is looking to expand further into the biofuel market.

FF manufactures and sells specialty chemicals and bio-based products primarily in the United States. The company's biofuel segment consists mostly of biodiesel, an alternative fuel that emits fewer carbon emissions and is manufactured at its Arkansas plant. FF has a current production capacity of 59 million gallons of biodiesel, which is made from vegetable oil, fat or grease feedstocks, and is usually mixed with petro-diesel. The company caters to the same customers who purchase petro-diesel for on-road use.

Mirroring the company's name, biofuel is FutureFuel's future. The segment is certainly growing thanks to those government mandates, which helped revenues more than triple last year, and its potential is a major catalyst going forward. However, FF currently generates most of its operating income from a highly profitable specialty chemicals unit.

In 2011, FutureFuel derived more than 90% of its chemical revenues from custom manufacturing of specialty chemicals, generally under long-term contracts. The unit also produces a bleach activator for Procter & Gamble, which had sales of $70.8 million in 2012, and represented 23% of total sales and 54% of the unit's sales last year.

In addition to specialty chemicals, FutureFuel makes a proprietary herbicide and intermediates for Arysta LifeScience. The herbicide's sales of $38.93 million in 2011 made up 13% of FF's total sales and 24% of segment sales.

The company continues to exceed expectations by maintaining profitability each year and realizing earnings of at least $0.58 a share since 2008. Furthermore, FF is in the biofuel segment that has more than tripled its revenue to $141.6 million from $40.9 million in 2011 on the government's increased usage mandates that were developed in 2005.

The attraction of FutureFuel lies in its valuation, and its very liquid balance sheet is an important component of this. Don't miss the boat on this one—accept your risk-free trial today, and get immediate access to my buy advice.

Stock Superstar #7:
A New Innovative IT Play

SolarWinds (which has nothing to do with solar power or alternative energy!) is an enterprise software company that sells its products to organizations of all shapes and sizes all over the world, including many Fortune 500 companies. Its main goal is to help other businesses cut costs and operate more efficiently. SWI does so through good products that cost less than many of its competitors, providing strong value that has resulted in a big and loyal customer base.

The company has built its niche in providing software that helps IT professionals manage all aspects of their firms' technology — from networks to servers — through its Orion Network Performance Monitor. The software can also monitor, troubleshoot and repair remotely.This is done through a process called virtualization, where data and network applications use the cloud to host data, applications and analytics. Clients can then access whatever they need from their individual machines. Most of us are familiar with pulling data off a network server or a cloud location such as Google docs, but virtualization allows the machines to function in different operating systems as well. The machines in essence become customizable so they can be used for a variety of different purposes. This is simpler and cheaper than every machine functioning on its one operating system and configured for specific purposes.

SWI is a real recession and post-recession success story. It continued to grow through the worst of times, increasing revenues from roughly $60 million before the Great Recession to a run rate of about $300 million today. The company has shown impressive growth through harsh conditions, and it is poised to continue this trend given its strong product pipeline and cross-selling abilities to a dedicated customer base. I recommended this stock in October 2011, and rode it to a solid 48% gain in only a little over three months. Don't miss out on our next leg of profits! Full details here.

Stock Superstar #8:
An Ironclad Profit Opportunity in This Market Volatility

Vale (VALE) is the largest exporter of iron ore on the planet. The company not only led the summer decline in mining stocks but also played a significant factor in the drag on the Brazilian market as a whole. While this stock was once a $50 billion knife that nobody wanted to catch, it's signaling strong value now that it appears to have stopped falling.

Earlier this year, VALE traded well beyond our range at a comfortable $14-$16 per share. But a 48% slide in iron ore prices naturally led investors to take that much money out of this chart in compensation, moving the action here lower than the worst levels it saw in the global credit crunch. In fact, when VALE hit $8.40 a few days ago, shares were cheaper on an absolute basis than at any point since mid-2005. It represents enormous opportunity at a forward P/E of 8X dramatically reduced 2014-2015 earnings targets and enough ballast on the balance sheet to justify a book value of $11.46 per share.

Details Here

The iron industry is in a lot of self-inflicted pain, but demand for ore to make steel remains robust worldwide, especially in China -- a key customer for VALE in particular -- where steel mills are consuming 16% more ore than they were a year ago. Now that Beijing has loosened borrowing rates, those mills can finance even bigger shipments and essentially buy all the ore they can handle. Don't miss out on this chance to snatch this stock up while it's attractively valued.

Stock Superstar #9:
Riding the Cloud to Monster Profits

Workday (WDAY) uses cloud technology to deliver software as a service (SaaS), which help companies manage time and talent through the cloud rather than on its clients' premises.

WDAY went public in late 2012, representing at the time one of the biggest tech IPOs after Facebook (FB). Like many of its software brethren, WDAY gets the bulk of its revenues from software applications via subscription services.

One of the key attractions to software companies is whether they are able to garner steady, repeat business over a relatively long timeframe, and more than 75% of the total subscription revenue is generated by the firm's recurring revenue. Moreover, WDAY's growth rate is outstripping its industry by several multiples, which in part explains its 25X sales multiple, while at the same time the company also sports growth notably above its software peers.

Given the very strong growth rates in place for both top line and near-term operational spending, this is a double-digit profit play you don't want to miss, but you must buy now before Wall Street catches on!

Stock Superstar #10:
Saving Lives One at a Time

It might surprise you to learn that according to the Journal of Patient Safety, the third-leading cause of deaths in the United States is preventable medical errors (right behind heart disease and cancer). These errors lead to 400,000 deaths a year – that's more than 1,000 people a day!

The next company I'm recommending to you is using technology to bring those numbers down. It has become the leading provider of technologically advanced automation that helps healthcare facilities (i.e. hospitals and pharmacies) streamline how medications are administered and manage costly medical supplies. Essentially, the company looks to reduce human error by creating products that ensure clinicians give the right medication to the right patient with the right dosage at the right time. Through its automation, analytics and medication adherence solutions, the company also reduces operating costs, improves workflow and increases efficiency.

This company has enjoyed solid growth in recent years, and management attributes this success to broadening their product portfolio, expanding its markets geographically, and forming partnerships with customers to address medication management through the entire continuum of care. The stock has held up well in market volatility, trading in a narrow range.

With its long-term story still intact,this company remains a good buy. Find out its namewhen you accept a 100% risk-free trial to GameChangers today!

My Promise to You: Double YOUR Money

I launched GameChangers because I love the thrill of the hunt—there is nothing (besides my kids) more exhilarating than watching your stock go up 22% in one day, 60% in one week, 200% in a year or 4,000% in a decade!

I have a long and proven track record of uncovering and profiting from GameChangers that have the potential to be the next Google or Amazon or Apple.

But most importantly, I started GameChangers because I know that investing in these GameChanging stocks can deliver stunning profits that can truly change your life—like they did mine.

I was a millionaire by the time I was 30. I “retired” at the age of 37 with enough money to last me more than a lifetime. Now I want to help as many investors as possible rack up big investing profits and enjoy the freedom that money can bring.

FREE REPORT #1: Big Profits from Big Data.
More and more companies are jumping on the big data bandwagon. These companies will often turn to an outside firm for assistance in managing all of the data, and this is where our opportunity to profit from this game-changing trend lies.

I have two stocks to tell you about now that help their customers maximize their returns on big data in a unique way.

FREE REPORT #2: Blockbuster Biotech Stock.
In this just-released briefing, I'll reveal the name of a company at the cutting edge of today's biggest life-saving and life-changing medical and scientific discoveries.

This company is in position to trump their competition and ride the healthcare IT spending wave for both the near and long term.

FREE REPORT #3: Two Recovering Consumer Plays
In this report, I'll share with you two companies that should continue to benefit from the increase in consumer spending, but also have specific catalysts to help drive them higher regardless of the market environment.

FREE REPORT #4: The New Industrial Revolution
77% of the world's population—5.3 BILLION people—own a cellphone. No other electronic device on the planet has that kind of reach. Today's smartphone is a TV, video game, camera, PC and telephone all rolled into one.

Its next target is your wallet. Mobile payment is a GameChanger of epic proportions in places like China and Africa where there are very few credit cards but billions of cellphones. Quite simply, this could be the biggest thing since e-commerce. The applications are endless—vending machines, ATM withdrawal, gas pumps will all go mobile in the very near future. Your path to double-digit profits is outline in this Special Report.

FREE REPORT #5: 45 Toxic Stocks To Sells
The 45 stocks I outlined in this report are not the only big-name stocks that are destined to go nowhere in the market's next surge upwards. Quite frankly, some of the Trim the Dead Weight in Your Portfolio — IMMEDIATELY!

There are monstrous profits to be made in the months ahead that you simply can't afford to be stuck holding the wrong stocks.

So I'd like to share with you 10 stocks that I recommend you sell now. When the market rockets higher, you simply don't want to have your money languishing in these toxic stocks.

SELL Priceline.com (PCLN). Travel and leisure companies are in a tight spot these days. Vacationers today are generally bargain hunters who do not seek out spas, casinos and on-board cruise shopping. Hotels are also feeling the pinch as they deal with the double whammy of fewer vacationers and fewer business travelers.

SELL Krispy Kreme Doughnuts (KKD). The company has struggled since its glory days back in 2004, and rival Dunkin Donuts (DNKN) still presents a significant challenge to its operations. DNKN is making a big push for better quality and conformity, and is winning the doughnut battle for now.

SELL General Electric (GE). President Obama has called for an overhaul of the U.S. Corporate Tax Code, as have members of both parties of Congress. This means you should be cautious of U.S. multinationals with low effective tax rates like GE. If the U.S. does move forward with simplifying its corporate tax code, many of these companies would take a meaningful hit to their earnings per share.

SELL Safeway (SWY). Same-store sales figures are of great concern, as they show only meager growth. Everyone needs to eat, but that doesn't mean grocery stores are a good bet these days. The triple whammy of food inflation, narrow margins and high unemployment is putting a lot of pressure on traditional supermarket chains. In this environment, even the big chains will have a hard time growing earnings in the next couple of years.

    5. 45 Toxic Stocks To Sells
- And much, much more!

Corporation (RAD) and Walgreen Company (WAG). These companies will struggle as their business gets shifted to mail-order pharmacies. As baby boomers continue to age, there will be an increasing number of patients with chronic medical conditions requiring a constant regime of medications. Both public and private insurers are increasingly turning to pharmacy benefit managers to manage costs and prescriptions for chronic conditions. The traditional drugstore is being cut out of the equation, and this is a trend that will only keep growing.

SELL Sears (SHLD) and J.C. Penney Company (JCP). These retailers can't seem to get their reluctant customers to open their wallets these days. When they do, they want big discounts. That makes it difficult for the companies to achieve real earnings growth in the current environment.

SELL Lulu Lemon (LULU) and GAP (GPS). LULU defied the recession with its high-end merchandise flying off the shelves. However, the stock is currently trading at a sky-high 40-50 times earnings which means everything has to go right in order for the company to continue operating at these levels. Sustainable? I think not. Gap expects to close 189 stores by the end of 2013, which will make it extremely difficult and virtually impossible to see an uptick in sales.

These 10 stocks are a great starting point to cleaning out your portfolio so you can take full advantage of the big market rally headed our way.

But I want to stress that they are not the only big-name stocks in danger today.
